LOCAL GERMAN'S VIEW OF THE WAR

By Major Lewis F. Korth, Former Editor of The Correspondent

Thursday, Sept. 24, 1914. All the Austrian armies which the P. P. E. Co. of London have been operating in Southern Poland and East Galicia are now concentrated on the river San, an arm of the Vistula, and the rail road to the eastward. The strong fortress Przemyśl, and for over a week a battle with the Russians, under General Kurysh, has been going on strenuously at it.

Victims now explains that the last operations in Eastern Galicia around Lemberg and in the adjoining Russian provinces of Lublin and Kielce were undertaken to draw the Russians out of East Prussia, and the reinforcements would be sent to the hard-pressed German lines. Now the German and Austrian armies of the East are concentrating in concentration attacks on the fortress Przemyśl and on the province of Silesia and Posen.

The Austrian Hungarian General Staff notes the progress of the German army along the entire downfall of Austria and the rivers of the Danube and the Danube. The German navy is giving as good an account of herself as the German army. The German people express appreciation and confidence in their victories expressed by the large subscriptions for the war loan authorized by the parliament. By the end of last week 4,000,000,000 marks were subscribed at home.

Riots in Berlin? That is the latest of the war news. We now get European papers again, and they tell us that the people of Austria Hungary support their government with an ardor nobody would have dreamed of. The people of the different nations in that country of late years. They are united as they never were before in the face of a common danger. The hatred of Russia and the fear of her is universal.

MR. AND MRS. KAHLE ARE HERE FROM SEAT OF WAR

Marooned in Berlin for four weeks after war was declared, Mr. and Mrs. Rhodan Kahle, who are living in Portsmouth, Saturday, they are on their way to St. Louis, where they reside and are the guests of Mrs. Kahle's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Beger of 1734 Eleventh street.

"We were accorded a grand treatment by the Germans while in Berlin. We suffered no inconveniences whatever," said Mrs. Kahle, Saturday, in discussing the vivid conditions that were presented in war-stricken Berlin.

"The people there, while wrought to a high tension by the news of the world wide war, they took care of all visitors in splendid shape. They provided Americans for special trains, and we were conveyed to The Hague on one of them. We saw any number of wounded soldiers, who were brought back to Hannover and Rotterdam. The scenes that we witnessed daily in Berlin cannot be pictured by Americans. They were terrible and we shall never forget them. Almost without warning Berlin, a beautiful city, was plunged from tranquillity to stirring war scenes. Men, women and children thronged the streets, singing war songs."

"Very little news was given out about the war. The newspapers handled the war situation with surprising conservatism," continued Mrs. Kahle.

"We were on our way to Russia, Italy, when the call to colors was issued in Berlin. Instantly the streets were crowded with men, who were ready to obey the Emperor's every wish. Such display of patriotism I have never before seen. Every man between the ages of 18 and 40 responded to the first call. The scenes of mobilization in Berlin were tremendously exciting. Men with a ready-made to go in the streets ready to fight for the German flag. Scenes of gaiety soon dissolved into scenes of sorrow. It was terrible."

"We reached London on September 10 and sailed for America on the steamer Olympic. In London all of the news of the conflict was published in a broad-minded way. I shall never forget the display of a shell exploded by the wounded soldiers as they returned to Berlin and were met by their families. The soldiers were besieged by friends and relatives who carried them on their shoulders."
